What is claimed is.

1. A data processing device wherein the improvement comprises:

    (a) Element or elements that are capable of producing Chinese-style language characters based on the method depicted in Figure 1.

    (b) A class of communication devices that possess the capability of processing the proprietary TRILAN vocabulary and its derivatives.

2. A class of data processing components that is capable of storing or processing in any way the information that involves the use of characters listed in Figure 2 in combination with phonetically Latinized words of the Chinese-style language.